ARTIST STATEMENT

Zuri A. Stanback, Sr. is a multimedia artist located in Atlanta, GA, who focuses on urban landscape photography and documentary work. With a passion for print media, Stanback shares his work primarily through his books, zines, and in-person exhibitions.

Vanishing Point is an ongoing fine art photography project consisting of images from neighborhoods east of downtown Atlanta. Exploring themes of place, memory, and transformation, the pieces in this collection offer allegorical representations of the rapidly changing urban landscape near Stanback's home. The area has experienced drastic changes in his 20 years living there. And with more luxury apartments, continued home renovations, trendy food halls, a paved Beltline, and new MARTA stations in the works, he feels he soon won't recognize it as the place he moved to a couple of decades ago. It will essentially disappear, replaced by progress.

Steeped in symbolism, the photographs are taken during heavy fog in early morning light to isolate the subjects and evoke a fading memory. The 2025 releases expand this atmospheric approach to include dusk and stormy conditions, deepening the emotional range and symbolic resonance of the work. The collection spans two distinct presentations that reflect both the industrial nature of the changing landscape and the intimate, personal connection to place. Through innovative printing techniques and thoughtful presentation, each series captures different aspects of this urban transformation while maintaining the project's core meditation on memory, progress, and the beauty found in everyday moments before they fade away.

Overall, the collection invites the viewer to reflect on the changes in their neighborhoods and recognize the hidden beauty they should appreciate everyday before it vanishes.

2025

The latest additions to Vanishing Point premiered at Artful ATL in June, 2025. They explore a more intimate relationship with the documented spaces through archival rag paper printing and museum-quality presentation. These nine new works expand the project's atmospheric vocabulary beyond early morning fog to include the dramatic lighting of dusk and the emotional intensity of stormy conditions, creating a broader emotional range that mirrors the complexity of loss and change.

Floating in shadow box frames with museum glass, these pieces invite closer contemplation and emphasize the tactile, personal nature of memory and place. This shift in medium reflects the evolving emotional landscape of the project—as the physical neighborhoods continue to transform, the artist's relationship to them becomes increasingly precious and fragile, requiring the careful preservation that archival materials provide. The paper's organic texture and the protective framing suggest both the vulnerability of these disappearing scenes and the importance of safeguarding their memory.

The inaugural presentation of Vanishing Point premiered at ARTiculate ATL in June 2024, featuring photographs printed on aluminum and illuminated with LED lighting. This technical approach directly reflects the steel-and-concrete environments being documented, while the LED lights mimic the softening effect of the fog captured in the early morning shoots.

Using a panoramic format for the buildings provides them a dramatic, cinematic feel that counters the mundane, unremarkable view passersby generally see. The triptychs of the Boulevard / Decatur overpass and Hulsey Yard create a similar cinematic feel visually, while the multiple images provide context and convey a sense of scale within the urban landscape.
